TWO BILLION FEET ALASKAN PULP WOOD OFFERED FOR SALE

Two billion feet of Alaskan pulp wood, the largest amount of National Forest timber ever offered for sale, is described in a prospectus recently issued by the Forest Service, United States Department of Agriculture. The timber is within the Tongass National Forest, on the west side of Admiralty Island, and covers about 50,000 acres with a frontage of 48 miles on navigable water, and 24 miles by boat from Juneau and 96 miles from Seattle. Four-fifths of the timber is western spruce, both of which make excellent grades of paper, as has been demonstrated by the mills of Oregon and British Columbia.

The sale period will be 30 years, and a large part will be required to utilize all the timber within that time. The sales contract requires that a pulp-manufacturing plant of not less than 100 tons daily capacity shall be established in Alaska by the purchaser within 3 years. This section of Alaska has many unappropriated power sites of suitable capacity for large pulp and paper plants.

The need of developing our pulp industry is emphasized by forestry experts who point out that although prior to 1909 all the paper consumed in this country was manufactured here, in 1920 two-thirds of the news print from timber grown on foreign soil. Reduced to dollars and cents this represents an annual payment of $10,000,000 for pulp wood, wood pulp and paper which this country has been obliged to import due to lack of raw material available to existing pulp mills in Alaska, where there is now a large supply of spruce and hemlock, and where wood can be grown at a rate sufficient to furnish indefinitely one-third of the present American news print requirements.

PALM OIL AS FUEL

A series of experiments, begun in 1914, but interrupted by the war, has recently been resumed in Brussels on the use of palm oil in internal combustion motors. A Swedish two-cycle semi-Diesel engine was found which would run successfully on palm oil. According to analysis by Belgian chemists, palm oil is a mixture of palmitic and oleic acids, with some stearic acid, and contains about 10 per cent. of fatty acids and appears as a pasty substance of yellowish or salmon color. Its caloric power is estimated at 8,224 calories. (Barthelemy-Mahier), and it is inflammable at 21 degrees centigrade.—Netherlands.
